Setting the Mac OS for Asian Language Input

You can easily change Macintosh OS X to accommodate typing in a variety of Asian language character sets (Chinese, Japanese, Korean, etc.).

1) Go to the blue Apple menu and select “System Preferences…”
2) A window like the one below will open (we’re only showing the top row here).

3) Select the “International” icon to open up the window you see on the left...

4) Click on “Input menu” tab on the right. The window will change to look like the one below...

5) Put a checkmark beside the input method you would like to use. You can select more than one.

6) Make sure the “Show input menu in menu bar” option at the bottom of the window is checked.

7) Use the flag icon at the upper right of the screen to select the input tools for your language. The flag will change to show which language is selected.

Please restart the computer when you are done!
